Alan Jenkins assists clients in the natural gas, electric power and communications industries as well as handling corporate and environmental matters. He conducts project development work for electric, gas, alternative energy and telecommunications projects, whether advising clients on how to structure proposed projects and asset sales/purchases, drafting and negotiating key project agreements or securing regulatory and financing approvals for such projects. Mr. Jenkins advises commercial and industrial clients on how to decrease their energy bills and works with clients on a variety of regulatory and appellate matters, which have included the first electric stranded cost proceeding before FERC following Order No. 888, the appeal of Order No. 636 that transformed the interstate natural gas market, and proceedings for the first complete unbundling of a local utility's retail gas service. Mr. Jenkins also represents clients on procurement bid protests and other matters pending before local agencies, hearing examiners and appellate courts. In particular, Mr. Jenkins has represented clients on matters pending before, among others:

- Federal Energy Regulatory Commission
- US Department of Energy
- US Postal Rate Commission
- Federal courts
- Local boards and departments

- US Army Corps of Engineers
- US Surface Transportation Board
- US Forest Service
- State courts
- State public service commissions
